

About the authors

Naison Ngoma is a senior researcher in the Defence Sector Programme at the ISS. He was previously a lecturer in the Department of Political Science at the University of the Western Cape.

Martin Rupiya is a senior researcher in the Defence Sector Programme at the ISS. He holds a PhD from the University of Zimbabwe.

Henry Mtonga is a member of Zambia's Parliament and serves on the National Security and Foreign Affairs committee. He has also served as Zambia's Inspector General of Police.

Benjamin Mibenge is a retired member of Zambia's defence force in which he rose to the rank of Lieutenant General and Commander of the Zambian Army. He also served as the country's Minister of Foreign Affairs and as Zambia's Special Representative to the United Nations.

Patrick Mulenga is an assistant director in the Bank of Zambia's Macroeconomic Analysis division of the Economics Department.

Len Le Roux is head of the Defence Sector Programme at the ISS. He is a retired major general from the South African National Defence Force and was involved in the defence transformation process in South Africa from 1995 to 2000.

Richard Cornwell is a research fellow in the African Analysis Programme at the ISS. He is a military historian.

Jemima Njeri is the civil society liaison officer in the SADC Programme at the ISS. She holds a Master's degree in business management.

Marie Lobo is a senior programme officer with the United Nations High Commission for Refugees at the Lusaka, Zambia office.