

Preface

This monograph is the contribution of the South African Institute of International Affairs (SAIIA) to the shadow peer review project of the African Human Security Initiative (AHSI) and has benefited from the collaborative effort of many people and institutions. The author is responsible for the choice of commitments and indicators in the field of elections and democratisation, as well as for developing the concepts and methods needed in order to conduct the review. However, since it is hard, if not impossible, to find one person who is an expert on democracy in all eight of the countries under review, a list of questions was sent out to researchers and experts on each of the eight countries. The monograph relies strongly on the country reports submitted by these researchers. Without this pan-African (and beyond) collaborative effort, the monograph would not have been possible, and the author wishes to thank all the country reporters for their contributions. Their names and institutions are as follows:

- Kato Lambrechts, Christian Aid (Algeria);
- Professor Christopher Clapham, Cambridge University (Ethiopia);
- Siegfried Pausewang, Christian Michelsen's Institute (Ethiopia);
- Dr Baffour Agyeman-Duah, Ghana Centre for Democratic Development (Ghana);
- Beatrice Munyendo, Institute for Policy Analysis and Research, Nairobi (Kenya);
- Dulue Mbachu, Associated Press (Nigeria);
- Dr Abderrahmane Ngaidé (Senegal);
- Dr Vincent Foucher, University of Bordeaux (Senegal);
- Michael Davies, SAIIA (South Africa); and
- Dr Paul Omach, Makerere University, Kampala (Uganda).

If other sources are not given, the facts and information in this monograph are taken from the eight country reports, which can be found in their complete form on the AHSI website at www.africanreview.org.

However, the author is solely responsible for the final result that appears in this monograph.

Finally, thanks are extended to the other AHSI partners for their frank discussion of the first draft; to Elizabeth Sidiropoulos and Ross Herbert at SAIIA for their input; and to the British Department for International Development (DFID) for funding the project.

An abridged version of this report, in both French and English, has been published separately as a paper by the AHSI. The paper, titled “African Commitments to Democracy in Theory and Practice: A review of eight NEPAD countries”, is available on the AHSI website: www.africanreview.org together with this monograph and other publications of the Initiative.
